SLEEP BY THE SEA.

Friends, when you think I am like to die, Carry me where the sea is roaring;
There on my last bed let me lie,
And list to the long wave landward pouringBeating, beating,
And ever repeating
The cry it cried, when it first was harled,
With a myriad shocks,
On the barrier-rocks
In the very birthday of the world,

In the very birthday of the world.

And—if I could die within sound of the sea—
The voices of all who er leved and know me,
To mingle with hera, who is descret to me,
Its nurman would bring—to elsep to woo me,
Throbbing, throbbing,
And plain level sobbing
As craft it siched when the night and morn
Had faded away
Of the first fair day,
When this beautiful world of ours was born.

Ob, there, in a church-yard, high on a cliff,
In how deep a sleep, from the vain endeave
Of longing and life, I could rest me—if
The sea its wiid lullaby sang forever,
Beating, beating,

The sea is wild lullaby sang lorever,

Beating, beating,
And still repeating
The cry it cried, when it first was hurled,
With a myriad shocks
On the barrier-rocks
In the very birthday of the world.

BENNETT.

The Founder of the Herald and the Father of American Journalism -- Review of the Life-Work of the

Extract from New York Correspondent of the Rochester Democrat. BEMNETT A FRENCHMAN. Notwithstanding the fact that Bennett is descended from one of the old High-land families, I have always considered him more French than Scotch, and I am inclined to think that in the commingling of nationalities which marked the wars of the Pretender, some intermarriage occur-red introducing this feature. Bennett's red introducing this feature. Bennett's philosophy is after the style of Rousseau ather than that of Hume, and in his en-ire career he has shown the vivacity of French blood, combined with Scotch te-nacity. I do not think it possible that any absolute Scotchman could have built up the Herald. They are too heavy, or, if you please, "too solid." Bennett as a combatant was as dashing as Marshal Ney, and his motto was "Audace, et tou-jours audace." The early pages of the Herald sparkle like champagne, and were composure; these were David Hale and Horace Greeley; all others dreaded it. Sometimes it brought personal assaults, but these did not intimidate. It is, indeed, surprising to see how the latter were made to work a benefit instead of a dam-When Jared W. ing when they departed. This was a re-taliation which these men did not expect, and which showed how easily Bennett could turn the tables on them. REMINISCENCES

Old men are full of talk over the past; and though Bennett is getting very feeble, yet if any one could suggest the strange events in his life, I think it would wake him up to full consciousness. Bennett's ory is yet to be written, and if proper lone will be the most interesting book ever issued from the press. About twenty years ago the late Isaac C. Pray, who once had a desk in the Herald office, wrote as "Life of Bennett," but it was too soon to give the matter a thorough hand ling. Parton has done something in the same line, but the field is still open and invites attention. Bennett's severest at-tacks were leveled at such men as Noah, the leading Jewish editor, Webb, of the cier, Hamlin, the actor, and William Seward, then Governor. War was delight. They were invited to make their worst retaliation, and were warned to prepare for a relentless foe. No one ever contended long with Bennett, for one would soon be worsted, and then would learn too late that he had increased his own punishment. As a soldier of the pen, Bennett was vigilant and presevering. His application to office work would have ruined any but a Scotch constitution. At times his health suffered extremely, but the Herald never showed neglect. It was spicy and fascinating while its master was suffering from all the ills of editorial life. The Herald was Bennett, but al-

1000 to invest in such an enterprise? The Fort Washington property contains four acres, and is immensely valuable; but it would look badly, and, in fact, involve loss of position, to sell it, while to live there is equally undesirable. Hence it is good for such a man to have an establishment in town. Young Bennett, were he not encumbered with wealth, would become distinguished as a navigator. His turn for yatching and other naval matters is no affectation. He has always had a prediffection for ships and navigation generally; but while he enjoys preseminence as Commodore of the yatching fleet, his easy position will prevent that effect which would lead to maratime distinction. Bennett is much broken with age, but has would not permit labor to be respected. held out wonderfully, considering the lard work he has only been equaled by Gree-leard work he has only been equaled by Gree-ley, and it may be remarked that Greeley, and it may be remarked that Greeley, and it may be remarked that Greeley, and it may be remarked that Greeley was the only editor whom he respected. It is true that he ridicated him, but this was only an element in editorial conflict. How much he respected Greeley may be judged from the fact that he once proposed to him a co-partnership.

Tyons ed to him a co-partnership.

A PUBLIFER REMARKNOE TO NEWS. I have said that as a news collector Bennet never had an equal. In that day there was no telegraph, and editors were thrown was no telegraph, and editors were thrown on their own resources, and in this Bennet showed great fertility. The European news brought by the steamer to Boston was then conveyed to this city by pony express. The Tribune's horses gave out on one important occasion, while Bennet's came through. The question was at once raised, was there no special artifice. once raised, was there no special artifice in this? Again, a rapid line of steams beats plied on the Sound. Bennett got the news from the steamers. When the latter reached the wharf, the "Extra Heralds" were rushed off to the eager commu-nity. Bennett's amazing success, as well as his pungent pen, justified the then title of the "Satanic Press."

public. Thirty years ago a very important question arose between England and America, and a war was imminent. A British subject had been arrested on peared in the paper of a Tennessee editor who wrote, with respect, "pretty aged minister." committed in the service of his country. American public spirit claimed his conviction, while Britain pronounced it a casus belli. The case was tried at Utica, in 1841, and the whole country was intensely excited concerning the result. Pat."

Who wrote, with respect, "pretty aged "ECOND HAND."

THE Boston Post (Democrat) abreviates the name of one of it exchanges into "Low. Cour.," and of another into "Wash."

Of various patents, for sale cheap, at 35 Monroe etreet, decis with summer a co.

The first to break this suspense was Ben nett, who announced McLeod's acquitts nett, who announced melecor's sequitta one day in advance of the mail. He said that the news was brought by a car rier pigeon, but it is probable he simply forecast the result by powerfully reason ing the matter. At any rate, though the affair be half forgotten it would be well to have this old matter explained.

Whatever may have been Bennett aults, he set a good example in his tem-perate habits. Even in the weakness of old age, while driving around his country seat in a pony cart, he got no further then in tippling than lager beer. He was constitutionally abstinent, and no appetite ruled him. In this respect he resembled Greeley. Indeed, neither of these men has ever pursued eating or drinking for pleasure. Bennett's ambition was simply the attainment of power while for pieastre. Dennetts ambition was simply the attainment of power, while Greeley's was to reform society. Both were successful, for Bennett became the dread of public men, while Grealey bore a leading part in the abolition of alavery, the greatest reformation which Ameri has ever witnessed.

NEARING THE END. Bennett maintained his attachment to Bennett maintained his attachment to the Herald unit after the close of the rebellion; but since then he has gradually relinquished it, and last year he gave the business generally into the hands of his oldest son, the commodore. Like Othello, he might exclaim, "Other farewell," etc. He had worked for nearly sixty years, and it was time to rest. The tenacity of his constitution may prolong his existence, but his mental powers are quite gone. In this respect his condition reminds us of the lines in Johnson's "Vani-gone. In this respect his condition reminds us of the lines in Johnson's "Vanity of Human Wishes," where former greatness is contrasted with the weakness of sentility, "From Marlboro eyes the tears of dotage flow, etc. Bennett has outlived almost all his opponents, and those who survive are, like himself, worn those who survive are, like himself, worn out with old age. Were the thing practi-cable, I would like to see these old men meet at a general supper, where they might enjoy a good table and a genial chat over old times and the lively com-bats of their youth.

The Labor Movement---A Letter to Horace Greeley and His Reply. The following private letters have und their way into print : My DEAR SIR—You are aware of the ntention of the Labor party to place can-lidates in the field for President and Vice resident, next February, at a convention of the held at Columbus, Ohio. The plat form of principles to be there enuncia-ted as landmarks to guide the coming canvass will, I have every reason to be-lieve, be much more conservative than that of the National Labor Union now extant.

Allow me to be short and plain. I be-eve there is no man in the country in whose honesty the masses have so n confidence as in yourself. If you had had less conscience from 1850 to '60, I believe you would have filled the place of Lincoln. I believe the time has come when this element of honesty in politics, which in the past has been so fittal to its possessors, will triumph. The developments of the last eight years, and especially of the hast two, are doing their work upon the public mind. We are on the eve of an overwhelming turn in lavor of integrity and conscience, and against political trickery and adroit hypocrisy.

I believe you are the man of all others to give force and direction to our party, and a vantage rallying ground, which would make our forces so strong that we oln. I believe the time has come whe would make our forces so would make our forces so strong that we should absorb by reason of a good prospect of success the major part of the demoralized Democracy. You have very generall planted yourself and given the great weight of your influence on the side of the oppressed classes of our people, and I cannot well brook the thought that you, at this supreme moment for the westling. at this supreme moment for the working classes, are to be other than their standand perhaps visionary when I assert that if it were possible for you to be our leader on a platform which should embody all the amelioration possible to our civilization, we should easily carry the countr in 1872. Of course, I am aware of the imperfections of our organization, and its lack of unity, but no one knows better than yourself what a power could be made of it could its disjointed elementa be allowed to rally about a great name like yours.

You are now substantially with us on all points save the Tariff. Could you not say: Abolition of all Internal Revespicy and fascinating while its master was suffering from all the ills of editorial life. The Heruli was Bennett, but always the cheerful, gay, triumphant Bennett, who secretly bore the penalty of success in silence.

BENNETT AT PRESENT.

He is an old man with two elephants on his hands. The one is the Heruli and the great house at Fort Washington, ten miles out of town. The first he would have sold some time ago if he could have got his price. His son is not a journalist, and never will be one, and the paper is conducted by a manager, Mr. Putnam, who keeps it abreast with all public matters. Different parties have talked about buying the Herulia; but who has $1,000, tool to invest in such an enterprise? Barbarism in Wetzel.

From the Wetzel Independent,

In the southern end of this county, just before the holidays, we learn from good authority, the scholars of one of the schools demanded a treat from their teacher which he did not seem willing to give, and several of the largest boys of the school put a rope around his neck and dragged him to the creek, cut a hole in the ice, and ducked him several times; just at the last time when he was nearly drowned, a stranger came along and put a stop to the proceedings. It is said that this shameful conduct of these wretches was One of his feats has never been explained, at least in a manner satisfactory to the public. Thirty years ago a very important question arose between England
